If the letters are already printed, then that's fine. If not, I would just remove my contact info.

Perhaps it would be better if you're listed as the primary contact then, and if there are specific risk questions we can work together.

I'm sending letters to the residents with their results. Previous regional letters have as contact the RPM and the regional risk assesor #s for people to call in if they have questions. There are a few English speaking people in town but the majority speaks Spanish. are you comfortable with this?
Option: When (if) they call in Spanish, we can conference and I'll translate. Does this work for you?
